

The Europe Business Assembly is proud to announce that Institute for Pulmonary Diseases of Vojvodina, Serbia has received the prestigious Best Enterprises Award

The Institute for Pulmonary Diseases of Vojvodina, Serbia is well established tertiary healthcare institution, dedicated to respiratory and chest disorders which serves as referential institution for 56 years. The Institute for Pulmonary Diseases of Vojvodina has been awarded by the Europe Business Assembly the 'Best Enterprises

Award' for their strong position in the national market, status in international ratings, the utilisation of modern management technologies, scientific research, high staff qualification and a successful marketing strategy.

The Europe Business Assembly (EBA) is an international corporation for the evolution and implementation of economic and social development. Its mission is to develop and implement projects for the economic and social growth of regions, companies and corporations; providing practical dialogue between experts, investors, businessmen, government bodies and local authorities.

The Best Enterprise Award project was established in 2000 to present the best regional companies to European business society. The main purpose of Europe Business Assembly is defining prominent companies with their further promotion and assistance in entering EBA society, assistance in attraction of partners world-wide among EBA members due to EBA growing chain of subsidiaries and partners in 60 countries.

Award nominees are carefully selected by EBA professional research team. Winners are determined through our ratings research, which includes media, social network, internet, news and open statistic data analysis and the recommendations of authorities, social organizations, institutions, chambers of commerce, branch associations and unions, educational institutions and the experts survey.

The Institute handles over 170000 procedures and with more than 7000 hospitalizations requiring state of the art diagnostic and therapeutic interventions. Recently the Institute, with management team leading by Prof Branislav Perin, underwent structural and function changes which enabled the institution and the employees to follow and to fit into the progress of modern medical science. The urge for expansion of institutional core activity, broadening it to basic science research, wide social policy, availability of medical care to population with special needs and implementation of informatics technologies to healthcare system was accepted.

The scientific output is internationally recognized, research papers with results of clinical trials conducted by Institute experts are published in some of the most prestigious international peer-reviewed journals. Large number of these results is incorporated into international guidelines. One of the latest achievements was organization of international Fourth Congress of Respiratory Medicine, with over 50 international speakers from 18 countries, which gathered over 1000 of respiratory physicians from the region.

In spite of the economic difficulties of this developing country, advances which are reflected through implementation of new technologies, rapid scientific growth and steadfast professional training of employees rank the Institute as the leading health institution in the domain of respiratory medicine in the region.

EBA is proud to present Institute for Pulmonary Diseases of Vojvodina as a leading regional company by awarding them the 'Best Enterprises Award' and its CEO Prof. Branislav Perin the title 'Manager of the Year' at the Achievements Forum - 2016 in Institute of Directors, London, UK on March 22. We wish them all the success.
